

title: Most persuasive arguments for using test automation tools like cypress/rspec/etc?

num_comments: 1

num_up_votes: 2

upvote_ratio: 1.0

Post Text

Hello fellow ADHDers! You folks know the _actual_ reason we write automated checks to help with testing. What are the most persuasive arguments that you've used to justify the time spent on it from a business or engineering perspective? Has anyone here ever had success convincing a company to let you spend time writing test-automation code as a "reasonable accommodation"?

Comments

Commenter_2

ID: REDACTED! ~(o.o)~ <3, Upvotes: 3

I wouldn't pitch it as a reasonable accommodation. Automation is good for repetitive regression testing (and more of course). I'd be scared if there was no automation going on as QA.