

title: Whats a good system for effectively doing leetcode?

num_comments: 2

num_up_votes: 4

upvote_ratio: 1.0

#### Post Text ####

I am currently taking a break after being let go due to poor performance at my old job and need to start studying to interview again soon. I know people hate leetcode and everything but where I currently live, it seems to be how a majority of the companies do interviews so I have no choice. To those that have done the leetcode/DS+A journey successfully what system worked for you? For example I will do a problem today and forget it within 2 days. Are there any tips on consistent repetition you could provide? Also many days I have no mental energy to even sit in front of my computer which adds to the struggle. Any help would be great!

#### Comments ####

Commenter_2

ID: REDACTED! ~(o.o)~ <3, Upvotes: 3

Two new problems a day. I spend the weekend redoing past problems. This should help, but it's tedious and can lead to burn out

Commenter_3

ID: REDACTED! ~(o.o)~ <3, Upvotes: 2

I'd say just work through the Blind 75. If you can do 3 a day, that gets you through it in under a month. You can skip the easy problems if they're easy enough that you can just write them down, and that will cut a few days off it.

Come back 1-2 days later and review what you did. You could use Anki or something to automate this sort of thing.